PASSAGE 1:

Introduced in the early 1940s, Maslow's theory of motivation remained primarily in the realm of clinical psychology where he did most of his developmental work. It was in 1957 that management and organizational theorists began to take note, beginning with Davis, Pellegrin and Coates, and McGregor. McGregor is credited with introducing Maslow to business educators in his 1960 book on the human side of enterprise. However, it was Davis who did more than anyone to bring Maslow's name to the fore. In his 1957 textbook on Human Relations in business, Davis outlined Maslow's hierarchy of needs.

That same year, Pellegrin and Coates, in an article in the Administrative Science Quarterly, discussed Maslow's 'well known formulation' on motivation in relation to executive career success, and McGregor, presenting at a conference at MIT, credited the influence of Maslow on his work. Two years later both the McGregor presentation and the Pellegrin and Coates article were reproduced by Davis and Scott (1959) in a book of readings on Human Relations in business. A revised version of the McGregor paper appeared in The Management Review but without the previous reference to Maslow. It was McGregor's (1960) popular book that restored reference to Maslow and helped establish McGregor as Maslow's popularizer among business educators.

PASSAGE 2:

One of the biggest business developments in recent years has been the outsourcing of many of the tasks in the human resources (HR) arena to vendors. Everything from benefits to candidate search to training to outplacement can be done by vendors. As more companies move to the global market, they have operations of their own in many parts of the world. More choices about where and how needed tasks can be performed put organizations and many HR executives in the role of making decisions about sourcing: where will our different tasks be performed?

Outsourcing in particular is not unique to the HR function, of course. But because the motivation for outsourcing is usually to cut labor costs, as labor is the majority of all operating costs, HR issues are involved in almost every outsourcing call. Data reported by the Human Resources Outsourcing Association (HROA) suggests that outsourcing of HR tasks grew by over 20% points from 2007 to 2009 alone and now exists in about 90% of organizations.

Choices about sourcing are not new, either. Manufacturing firms have long had to decide in which of their locations to produce the various components of their final products or, more fundamentally, whether to use subcontractors to produce them. Better information technology has expanded the range of businesses where sourcing choices are possible, especially in white collar jobs. We could have the software done by our Indian office, the outbound calls initiated by our Philippine call center, and the policies drafted in the U.S.

16- The underlined word "initiated" in paragraph 3 is closest in meaning to …….. .

1) accredited
2) extinguished
3) commenced
4) specified

17- According to paragraph 1, one of the tasks which has not yet been relegated to vendors is …….. .

2) making the decisions about sourcing in organizations
3) educating the organizations' new or senior employees
4) looking for qualified workers to be hired by employers

18- According to paragraph 2, the reason why HR matters play a part in more or less every outsourcing decision is that …….. .

1) the employees' payments are the largest part of an organization's expenses
2) as a matter of fact, outsourcing is by no means confined to the HR function
3) nowadays, only about 10% of organizations have not outsourced their HR tasks
4) reports indicate that outsourcing of HR tasks increased rapidly within only two years

19- According to the passage, which of the following statements is NOT true?

1) In most cases, outsourcing is stimulated by the organizations' financial policies.
2) Sourcing options have been exploited since long ago by a variety of manufacturers.
3) Advances in IT have made outsourcing more viable, especially regarding manual labor.
4) Globalization of the markets has contributed to an increase in outsourcing various tasks.

20- The passage provides sufficient information to answer which of the following questions?
1) In what year was the first report on outsourcing of Human Resources tasks published?
2) What is the name of an organization that provides information about HR outsourcing?
3) Approximately, how many companies are now involved in outsourcing HR tasks?
4) In which countries are the greatest number of outsourcing vendors located?

PASSAGE 3:

By April 2005, more than 88,800 facilities worldwide had certified their environmental management systems (EMS) to ISO 14001, the global EMS standard, and thousands more had adopted uncertified EMSs. [1] EMSs are strategic management approaches that define how an organization will address its impacts on the natural environment. While prior research has evaluated the reasons why organizations adopt an EMS and the potential these environmental strategies have for improving the environment, questions remain about whether organizations are using their EMSs to challenge their supplier networks to become more environmentally sustainable. At issue is that EMSs do not require organizations to improve their environmental performance, but instead focus on creating and documenting environmental policies and procedures. Additionally, there is no way of externally verifying that an organization's environmental performance improvements actually occur. EMSs therefore may represent only symbolic efforts to improve an organization's image. In instances where EMSs enhance an organization's environmental performance, some scholars suggest that improvements are likely to occur within the organization's operational boundaries rather than being extended throughout the supply chain. [2]

Despite these concerns, the operational capabilities necessary to adopt an EMS may also assist an organization's efforts to reduce its environmental impacts throughout its supply chain. EMS adopters therefore may be more likely to rely on their complementary knowledge-based capabilities towards working with their networks of suppliers and customers to minimize system-wide environmental impacts. [3] In other instances, organizations that chose to adopt an EMS may endure the same institutional pressures as organizations that adopt Green Supply Chain Management (GSCM) practices, which is why they utilize both environmental management practices simultaneously. Regardless of the nature of their potential complementarity, organizations that adopt EMSs may have a greater probability of implementing environmentally sustainable management practices by considering their environmental impacts beyond their organizational boundaries. [4]

21- Which of the following techniques is used in paragraph 1?
1) Anecdote
2) Direct quotation
3) Rhetorical question
4) Cause and effect

22- According to paragraph 1, the main problems regarding the effectiveness of EMSs are that …….. .
1) only 88,800 facilities worldwide have certified their EMS and thousands more have adopted uncertified EMSs
2) they are more concerned with policymaking than with tangible results and it is also impossible to assess their outcome
3) organizations only use their EMSs to challenge their supplier networks to become sustainable and refrain from doing so themselves
4) the only instances where EMSs enhance an organization's environmental performance are where scholars intervene and it requires an extended supply chain

23- According to paragraph 2, notwithstanding the concerns voiced in paragraph 1, it is probable that …….. .

1) organizations that opt for an EMS may be able to avoid the kind of institutional pressures that organizations adopting GSCM practices will have to endure
2) organizations that adopt EMSs may rely on the knowledge-based capabilities of their suppliers and customers to utilize system-wide environmental impacts
3) the operational capabilities required for implementing an EMS would indeed help make an organization more environmentally sustainable all across its supply chain
4) considering their environmental impacts beyond their organizational boundaries, the lack of regard for the natural environment will prevent EMS adopters from being more sustainable

24- Which of the following statements can best be inferred from the passage?

1) Today, organizations are somewhat under pressure to give consumers and other actors an impression of being concerned with environmental issues.
2) In the coming years, certainly fewer companies will show a tendency to adopt certified EMSs compatible with standards such as ISO 14001.
3) Prior to the year 2005, environmentally sustainable management was not among the topics of interest for directors and executives of large-scale firms.
4) In general, there is no difference between adopting EMSs and the lack of any such management approaches regarding an organization's environmental impacts.

25- In which position marked by [1], [2], [3] and [4], can the following sentence best be inserted in the passage?

Moreover, EMS adopters may have little reason to 'green' their supply chains, since they can market themselves as being environmentally proactive (by virtue of having an EMS) without undertaking these additional efforts.

1) [1] 2) [2] 3) [3] 4) [4]
